2011 Woodford Summit

National Impacts, Regional Opportunities

America's Path Toward Greater Energy Independence will be a key topic for discussion during the 2011 Woodford Shale Summit sponsored by the Interstate Oil and Gas Compact Commission (IOGCC) and the University of Oklahoma (OU) on OU's Norman campus March 29-30.

The Woodford Shale Summit will provide an opportunity for the education of stakeholders as experts discuss key issues in the Woodford Region, a unique reservoir that has tremendous potential for both oil and gas production.

While the conference focus will cover shale gas development, the discussion involves a much broader range of energy policy topics. Conference sessions will explore the importance of utilizing natural gas, along with demand-management, efficiency, and renewables as partners to develop our nation's natural gas resources and move toward energy independence.

Among the topics to be discussed during the Summit are: Natural Gas End Use, Business/Investment Climate, Environmental Issues Associated with Shale Gas Development, Hydraulic Fracturing, and Discussion of Community Partnership and Shale Gas Development Success Stories.

For additional information regarding the summit and an updated agenda visit www.woodfordsummit.com
